Historical Security Council

Presidential Statement

The UN Security Council abhors the institutionalized racism of the Apartheid government in South Africa. The Council reaffirms the actions of the General Assembly in passing Resolution 1761, condemning South Africa's policies. The Council would like to endorse the progress made by the South African government against racism, although recognizes that more must be done. The Council encourage a free government serving all the people of South Africa regardless of race, social standing, or religion.
